

Dr. Marc Dollinger is a writer and professor on the Jewish Studies faculty at San Francisco State University. He holds an endowed research chair in Jewish Social and Social Responsibility. Dr. Dollinger feels that it's a scholar's obligation and privilege to "complicate the narrative and deepen learning." He aims to turn preconceived notions about Jews and politics on its head, and convince people to think about things in new, different, and exciting ways. Dr. Dollinger is a past board president of both Brandeis-Hillel Day School and the Jewish Community High School of the Bay, where his daughters received their educations. He has also served on the board of Jewish LearningWorks, URJ Camp Newman, Brandeis Marin Jewish Day School, the Bay Area Jewish Healing Center, and Lehrhaus Judaica. Dr. Dollinger has appeared in the PBS television show, American Jerusalem, offering insights into the history of San Francisco Jews, and on NBC's prime-time show, Who Do You Think You Are? teaching academy-award winning actress Helen Hunt about her San Francisco Jewish roots.

Jews and the Black Power Movement, 1960s and 1970s

Based on his most recent book, Black Power, Jewish Politics: Reinventing The Alliance In The 1960s, Dr. Dollinger argues that the Jewish ethnic and religious revival of the late 1960s and 1970s grew from the Black Power movement itself, and offers a very different understanding of a black-Jewish alliance.
